

Captain Victor L. Pesce
U.S. Navy, Retired

Victor Pesce's career spans 45 years experience in military operations, defense research and development programs, and international relations.

His service as a Navy pilot, from 1962 through 1991 saw combat in Vietnam, command of aviation forces in Antarctica, diplomatic posting as Naval Attaché to Sweden, and command of the Office of Naval Research in Europe. Subsequently joining Lockheed Martin Skunk Works, Victor Pesce continued in engineering management positions developing weapons systems for classified Air Force programs.

Captain Pesce, and his wife Jane, live in the high desert aerospace centered community of Palmdale, California, where he maintains his defense contacts, and they both remain engaged in community service.

Pesce has studied at St. John's University (B.A., Social Science), University of Southern California, George Washington University (M.B.A., Financial Management), and the U.S. Foreign Service Institute (M.A. equiv., Scandinavian Area Studies).